

US Issues Travel Alert After Osama Bin Laden Killing

Monday, 02 May 2011

The State Department on Sunday warned Americans worldwide of "enhanced potential for anti-American violence" following the killing of Al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden.

The State Department on Sunday warned Americans worldwide of "enhanced potential for anti-American violence" following the killing of Al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden.

"Given the uncertainty and volatility of the current situation, US citizens in areas where events could cause anti-American violence are strongly urged to limit their travel outside of their homes and hotels and avoid mass gatherings and demonstrations," the State Department said in a statement.
